

John Moyik

Young John Moyik's original plan for the future was to become an author, a professional cello player, a priest, even a pilot; he eventually settled on working tech for theater or design.

For over twenty years John has spearheaded organization and design management at Design Contact. His passion for “making things work” goes to use doing everything from solving the smallest, most detail-oriented problems to driving the planning behind large-scale projects.

He enjoys the technical aspects of the business most, and started off running shows seven nights a week for the international resort chain Club Med. It stands to reason that his favorite experiences working at Design Contact come along with the demands of the biggest shows – whole convention centers, warehouses, multiple sets.

John's contributions to the company come in the form of the logical processes and methods that he has created to “make it all work.” In addition to this, he also runs DC Connect, which demands planning itself, but also calls for sales and planning. That's fine by John. He thrives behind the scenes getting down to the knitty-gritty so that the designers can excel!

The work that John has done over the years spans over a large breath of subjects, sizes, and mediums, but is unfailingly skillful. His management has also enabled thousands of other designs and projects.
